

To the FCC and NAB, Please do not try to regulate the use of satellite radio. As a satellite radio user, I pay a fee each month for the service, and appreciate the variety and quality of the service. Although I do not use the local traffic conditions much, the few times I have used it, I have found it much more beneficial than the services provided by local radio stations. The satellite radio service provides traffic information quickly and without breaks for commercials. On local broadcasting, you hear lots of commercials, the DJs talking about silly topics and don't get the traffic info when you need.

If you really want to regulate what is broadcast over our airways, turn your attention to something that seriously devalues the country. Although, at this time, I can't really think of a form of media that is degrading the quality of American life.

In spirit of American competition, satellite radio is raising the bar of service and quality, for local stations to remain effective, they will also need to raise the bar. If local stations are so worried about losing business/listeners, then it's their job to adopt changes, not the responsibility of FCC/NAB to regulate.
